

The ferryboat Niagara, running between Buffalo and Ft. Erie, was caught in an ice jam in the winter of 1891 and carried down the river under the International bridge. The bridge caught the pilot house and upper structure and leveled it off. The picture, which was made at Hamilton street when the boat was brought in, was supplied by Charles M. Young, 339 Exchange street, Rochester. The News picture editor pays $2 for each interesting old photograph used.

Pictured above is the Niagara, as it looked after it's bout with the ice, and the International Bridge.
